Preliminary Note: This office action incorporates a new grounds of rejection which are not entirely necessitated by the amendment of October 3, 2003. The office action is therefore made non-final.

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

(e) the invention was described in (1) an application for patent, published under section 122(b), by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent or (2) a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent, except that an international application filed under the treaty defined in section 351(a) shall have the effects for purposes of this subsection of an application filed in the United States only if the international application designated the United States and was published under Article 21(2) of such treaty in the English language.

Claims 25-29 and 34 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Judge et al. (U.S. Patent 6,401,138).

Claim 25: As described at col. 2, line 46 through col. 3, line 10, Judge et al. discloses an application program interface (API) that can be superimposed on a patient context interface (PCI). The API is readable as the claimed "API" and the PCI is readable as the claimed preexisting user interface of the HCS. The overall computer system is readable as a healthcare system (HCS) as it permits the API to retrieve medical data (col. 2, lines 4-14) and includes established controls (col.3, lines 5-6) to permit the retrieval of data.

The API in Judge et al. is an added user interface to the PCI, which is the preexisting user interface. Implementing the API involves at least one logging process, which is shown in FIG. 8. Here, the API performs a logging operation where applications are registered into the PCI. This is also an authentication process since the PCI can issue responses that applications being loaded are successful or invalid (col. 3, lines 26-28). Once the registration process is complete, the application can be used to retrieve data from a memory, which is readable as the claimed document management system.

Art Unit: 2175

Once the applications are registered, the user can then retrieve data or documents by invoking retrieval commands (col. 3, lines 5-6).

Claim 26-27: As described in col. 2, line 58through col. 3, line 10, the API superimposed on the PCI can access function calls, such as "Retrieve Apps()" and "Retrieve Data()". Both the functions calls and the arguments within the function calls (the data in the parentheses) are readable as control objects. These control objects perform queries to obtain data.

Claim 28: The API of Judge et al. adds code to the overall computer system (HCS) by adding registered applications, events and data (see FIG. 4).

Claim 29: Judge et al. discloses the user invoking an operation to register an application. which reads as an attempt to log onto the HCS since it involves registering data with the HCS. The act of a user using the application to contact the document management system (memory of Judge et al.) reads an action of the user logging on the document management system.

Claim 34: See remarks for claim 29.
